Great Audience Greets Her and Says Good-by-Other Noted Singers in the Cast-Loving Cup, Resolutions and speech by Dippel Follow the Music.

Mme, Marcella Sembrich bade farewell to the operatic stage of America in a performance given at the Metropolitan Opera House last night. The programme consisted of the second scene of the first act of "Don Pasquale," part of the second act, including the lesson The scape of "Il Barbiere di Siviglia" and witha the first act of "La Traviata." An audience of monster size packed the house brich received a letter of good wishes to sufficiation and paid to the artist a yesterday from the directors of the Mettribute beautiful enough to move even a professional watcher of operatic doings to tears. It was an honor to the singer, but even a greater honor to the public.

The occasion was indeed unique. Singers have come and gone, but there has always been a suspicion-or a hopethat they would return. But Mme. Sembrich elected to take a formal and final farewell of the operatic stage and her make themselves equal to the demands of the event. As for Mme. Sembrich herself, she was shaken by the reception which met her entrance as Norina in the excerpt from Donizetti's opera, but she quickly recovered herself and proceeded to pour out her voice with an abandon which showed that she was trying to give her friends her best,

After the scene from "Don Pasquale" she was called out a dozen times, while over again with flowers till the stage was lined with them. Mme. Sembrich embraced Mr. Scotti, who sang Dr. Malatest in general:

"If these Sunday 'pops' were the perfect and triumphant success that most people imagine they would certainly not be coming to a close to-morrow.afternoon. A great success they have unsloubtedly been in an artistic sense. Every one who has attended them has enjoyed and spoken well of them. The press has criticised them in the warmest terms of praise. But ever since they started they have been a dead loss. Only a millionaire or a subsidized musical society could afford to go on in the face of such weekly debit belances.

"Now how to explain this result in the lord where I took quarters was a Danish lawyer who was charter was a Danish lawyer who was a purity to get to New York. One day I was reading the Bible, in the locked as if he were ready to weep. It was a pretty but a pathetic scene. They are two old comrades, and they were at the parting of the ways. It was their last the parting of the ways. It was their last attended them has enjoyed and spoken well of them. The press has criticised them in the warmest terms of praise. But ever since they started they have been a dead loss. Only a millionaire or a subsidized musical society could afford to go on in the face of such weekly debit belances.

"Now how to explain this result in the book for eight hours without putting it down. I procured Swedenborg's writings and on the way home by three lackeys came and went over and duet from "Don Pasquale." This was not enough for the audience, and Mr. Bonci loudly cried "Sonnambula!" whereupon she sang "Ah, non giunge" from "La Sonnambula." The applause continued, and thereupon she satisfied her hearers by singing the little Polish song she has so often given, playing her own accompaniment on the piano.

Mme. Sembrich's associates in this excerpt in addition to Mr. Bonci were Mr. Campanari as Figaro, Mr. Paterna as Bartolo and Mr. Didur as Basilio. When the curtain had fallen the soprano was called out a dozen or more times and again buried in flowers. This time, however, she received a massive silver loving oup, the gift of Mr. Carusc. It was presented without ceremony by Mr. Viviani, once a member of the company and even at times a Kafner.

The final number, the first act of 'La Triavata," had a "star" cast. The Flora - small part-was Geraldine Farrar. Alfredo Mr. Caruso, the Baron Mr. Scotti and octor Grenril Mr. Amato. In the fête scene Mmes. Gay, Eames, Destinn and practically all the unemployed members of the company appeared as guests of Violetta. After the curtain had fallen Mme Sembrich was called before the curtain and act of "Le Nozze di Figaro"—was arranged for the ceremonies. A throne was placed at one side for Mme. Sembrich. Gustav Mahler took his place in the conductor's chair and began the march from "Le Nozze di Figaro." Mme. Sembrich, on the arm of Mr. Gatti-Casazza, entered, followed by all the artists of the company. Then Mr. Dippel read to Mme Nembrich the resolutions of the Metropolitan Opera. Company which made her the first honorary member of the company and requested that at any time she happened to be in New York she should appear at any time she cared to. The resolutions follow:

dientical handful every week, mind, but turning up once in every month or six weeks, making at the most a total of soo or 1,069 out of the vast army of people who are supposed to love and support music in this city. You can calculate the pecuniary sum for yourself.

"I am told that if I persevere and go on for three years I shall create a solid and prosperous institution out of these Sunday 'pops.' I cannot find great consolation in the assurance. Moreover, it is not very pleasant to have to rely upon individual generosity and support at a time when special pleaders are constantly going round with the hat and building up guarantee funds on behalf of every orchestral and choral organization in the city.

"One thing at least the world owes to explanation: New York is too much saturated with music already, and nothing short of the purest sensationalism can stir its jaded senses. The public has gone 'opera mad' and gradually attracted all the greatest singers on earth. It has converted orchestral conductors into 'stars' at the expense of the institutions that exploit them. Everything else is a mere incident.

"I imagined there was a growing demand for Sunday music. So there is; but to supply it you must not go outside of the opera houses or Carnegie Hall, unless it be to the vaudeville theatres, where perhaps the largest demand is most steadily satisfied. Take a newly built and beautiful uptown theatre, a shade off the well worn track, though on a crosstown line; give Sunday afternoon concerts of abbreviated chamber works, of them settled the heirs of Mr. Chesterton, who be elections of the highest order, all performed by executants of the first rank (most of them actual stars when they appear elsewhere), making an ensemble of generally unsurpassable merit; do this, and who will come to your entertainment? I will tell you—a collection of 150 to 200 genuine music lovers, paying an average of less than a dollar each; not the same identical handful every week, mind, but turning up once in every month or six weeks, making at the most a total of 800 or 1,000 out of the vast army of people who are supposed to love and support.

Mr. Chesterton died in 1854, leaving three lots—then away uptown—to the society. In the deed, however, they required that the land should never be used for any other purpose than as a site for a church of Mr. Chesterton's faith. The restriction, not being in accordance with the will, clouded the title to most support.

JOHN D. TO THE FARMERS. Says the Great Question at Last Is, What

Have You Left to Posterity? Augusta, Ga., Feb. 6.—John D, Rocke-feller to-day attended a farmers' club meeting and barbecue dinner and made a short speech to the farmers. He was the honor guest of the occasion, although there were other distinguished men preent, among them Dr. I. D. Warner of Bridgeport, Conn., and W. C. Rudd of Cleveland. Mr. Rockefeller, talking to the farmers after the barbecue said:

"I am not a farmer, but my ancestors as far back as I can remember were. ing these meetings in which you exchange experiences and experiments. Apparently you have greatly profited by them. But in my country each man went in a haphazard sort of way without any rules

a little church building upon land to which the title was not perfect. In half a century the Swedenborgians have prospered so well that the present church is ample in every respect, ownership of the site is absolute, and an offer of $225,000 for the property was refused in 1907.

Mr. Bigelow, who will be 92 years old when his next birthday comes round in November, became a convert to the doctrines of Swedenborg a little while before the dedication in 1859. He is one of the few persons living who took part in the dedication. In taking the chair last night he explained how his mind was timed toward Swedenborg.

"I shall take the liberty," he said, "of seating myself in the chair every presiding officer is presumed to occupy. This occasion is associated in my mind with another, the greatest in my life.

"About fifty years ago I found myself on the island of St. James in the West Indies. It was fearfully scourged by cholers; there was no transportation and no travellers. "I know nothing about farming, although I profess to be a farmer. I have been very interested while riding through the country to notice the weight placed on a wagon, and I have wondered how much each wagon can carry. I think roadmaking is a great essential to the farmer. Coming over I noticed the roads was road as smooth and level as this foor. If the farmers would put a little part of their savings into making good roads in the country.

Mr. Rockefeller was applauded by the farmers. He said that while he enjoyed the barbecued meats they were rather "greasy."
